The ex-Queen arrived in New York yesterday. She was accompanied by Icseph K. Rea, John D. Almoku and Miss Myra Heleluke.

Accommodations were sought at several other hotels before the party went to the Roland. The Waldorf-Astoria, the Murray Hill, the Savoy and the Netherlands in turn refused to provide them with rooms. "All full" was the stereotyped reason given, though Mr. Rea, of the ex-Queen's retinue, declared indignantly to-day:

We were not even treated with com-

"What sort of foster-mother does the Queen make?" repeated her protege.

"She could not have ruled a country if she could not rule us, you know. She is severe, but very kind. She is good natured—that is best.

"Your American mothers I watched on the train just this last trip of ours, and they are not good-natured. The Queen has always a funny thing to tell. She does not brood about her troubles—the cheep the protection last year to paying duty on two automobiles she had sent to Hawaii. Lilluokalani is proud of her ancestry. She is a great grand-niece of the celebrated Kapiolani, one of the first Hawaiians to be converted to Christianity by American missionaries. Kapiolani, was the chieftainess who banished the ancient Fire God and released her people from thraidom.
